London, March 12.—Recent explorations into the sphinx have had interesting results, according to advice from Egypt. Professor Weisner succeeded in removing the accumulated sand of sixty centuries from the interior of the head and gained entrance through the neck to the temple that runs the whole length of the gigantic body, measuring 120 feet.

In the temple is a pyramid forming the tomb of Menes, the first King of Egypt. It is supposed to contain his mummified body. Sloping passages from the temple lead to other chambers not yet explored, and also, it is believed, to a subterranean city.
